TRUMP HINTS TO DEPLOY MILITARY, CLOSE BORDER

1 President Donald Trump threatened to deploy the military and close the southern U.S. border on Thursday as more Hondurans and Salvadoreans joined thousands of migrants in Guatemala headed north. "I must, in the strongest of terms, ask Mexico to stop this onslaught - and if unable to do so I will call up the U.S. Military and CLOSE OUR SOUTHERN BORDER!" Trump wrote on Twitter. Several thousand Honduran migrants traveled this week through Guatemala headed to Mexico, with some hoping to cross into the United States to escape violence and poverty in Central America. Central American migrants hiked from Honduras through muddy jungle and residential streets, some toting babies along with backpacks, Reuters images show. In Guatemala City, where migrant shelters filled with people, waves of people departed at daybreak on roads leading to Mexico. The nearest border is about 110 miles away. U.S. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo prepared to travel later in the day to Panama and then Mexico City, where he was to meet with Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto on Friday.

EX-FBI AGENT SENTENCED TO 48 MONTHS FOR LEAK

2 A federal judge in Minnesota sentenced former FBI agent Terry Albury to 48 months in prison on Thursday for leaking classified information to a journalist, his defense lawyer Joshua Dratel told Reuters. Albury's sentence is much harsher than his defense lawyers had hoped, but slightly less severe than the 52-month prison term that federal prosecutors were seeking. Albury pleaded guilty to two counts of leaking classified materials earlier this year. Albury's attorneys have said that he was a whistleblower and portrayed his decision to leak information related to the FBI's counterintelligence program as "an act of conscience." A source familiar with the case previously told Reuters that online news organization The Intercept was the recipient of the information Albury was charged with leaking. The leaks by Albury, who was the only African-American field agent in the region at the time, related to his concerns that the FBI's tactics for countering violent extremist groups amounted to racial profiling and intimidating minority communities.

Smith, former governor of New York and America's first Catholic presidential nominee.

TRUMP: IT LOOKS LIKE KHASHOGGI IS DEAD

4 President Donald Trump said on Thursday he presumes journalist Jamal Khashoggi is dead and that the U.S. response to Saudi Arabia will likely be "very severe" but that he still wanted to get to the bottom of what exactly happened. In Istanbul, Turkish investigators for a second time searched the Saudi consulate where Khashoggi — a U.S. resident and Washington Post columnist who was a strong critic of Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman — vanished on Oct. 2, seeking clues about an incident that has caused an international outcry. Trump acknowledged for the first time that Khashoggi had likely been killed. "It certainly looks that way to me. It's very sad," Trump told reporters before boarding Air Force One on a political trip. Trump spoke hours after getting an update from Secretary of State Mike Pompeo on the results of Pompeo's emergency talks in Saudi Arabia and Turkey. In an interview with the New York Times on Thursday, Trump also expressed confidence in intelligence reports that suggest a high-level Saudi role in the suspected killing of Khashoggi.

KELLY, BOLTON GET INTO HEATED EXCHANGE

5 Two of President Donald Trump's top advisers got into a heated exchange outside the Oval Office on Thursday as passions boiled over about how to handle illegal immigration, two sources familiar with the incident said. The two advisers were White House Chief of Staff John Kelly, who is a former secretary of Homeland Security, and Trump's national security adviser, John Bolton, the sources said. One source described the argument as a "tense exchange" but said that it had blown over, and that it involved the job performance of Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen, a former deputy to Kelly. Another source said it was "not a big deal." Trump, asked about the incident, told reporters: "That I have not heard about." White House spokeswoman Sarah Sanders said in a statement: "While we are passionate about solving the issue of illegal immigration, we are not angry at one another. However, we are furious at the failure of Congressional Democrats to help us address this growing crisis."

Witches will gather in Brooklyn to hex Brett Kavanaugh

Self-described witches from across the U.S. are taking aim at the new Supreme Court Justice.

ANNA HARSTEDT
letters@metro.us

Thousands of self-described witches will make their way to Brooklyn this weekend to try and put a hex on newly sworn-in Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh, who has been accused by multiple women of sexual misconduct.

The Kavanaugh hexing event will take place on Saturday at an occult bookstore and spiritual community in Bushwick called "Catland Books," according to its organizer. The book store's co-owner, Dakota Bracciale, who identifies as a witch, told Metro that the ritual is a gathering for people who want to challenge the "Trumpster fire" and Kavanaugh's SCOTUS confirmation.

Kavanaugh has denied multiple allegations of sexual assault, which came to light during his Supreme Court nomination hearings. Most notably, Dr. Christine Blasey Ford testified to the Senate Judiciary Committee before Kavanaugh was voted in to the role, stating that she was "100 percent" certain Kavanaugh had sexually assaulted her while the two were in high school.

Despite the allegations, Kavanaugh was confirmed to the highest court in the nation, a move that unleashed a tidal wave of outrage from survivors of sexual assault and inspired protests across the country. Bracciale and others in the witchcraft community are among those angered by Kavanaugh's appointment.

"We're not going to let monsters like Trump and Kavanaugh win," Bracciale told Metro. "The system is broken and the people in charge need to be taken down."

Bracciale explained that for some, using witchcraft and rituals like hexing is the only way to attain justice. "Witchcraft has always been practiced by people who are cast out, harmed by society and have to make their own way," Bracciale said.

"[Kavanaugh] will be the focal point, but by no means, the only target, so bring your rage and all of the axes you've got to grind," says the store's hexing invitation. "The event will embrace the powers of witchcraft to bring justice to those of us who have been wronged by men just like him."

"Cursing and hexing has always been a key part of witchcraft. It's a ritual with the intention of harming the target," Bracciale said. "The exact spells spoken during the ritual is different for every individual. Some people may want to focus on Brett Kavanaugh and others on their sexual assaulter, rapists or abusive partners."

The event sold out quickly, Bracciale said. It has been viewed about 750,000 times on Facebook and 1,300 people said they plan to attend the event.

"We have had three hexes of President Donald Trump but the response has been nothing like this. It's overwhelming but also really great," Bracciale said. "In comparison with the hexes on Trump, the hex scheduled for Kavanaugh has received about twice the response."

Tickets to the event cost $10, and half of the proceeds will be donated to the Ali Forney Center and Planned Parenthood. Although the event is sold out, anyone interested can still by tickets to donate money and support the community.

"Everyone, regardless of belief, is welcome, actually usually only half of the people attending believe in witchcraft," Bracciale said.

"We want to go together and tell survivors that we see you and that we can hear you."

What are you going to do with your $970M Mega Millions jackpot winnings?

Several financial experts explain what to know about taxes and financial hiccups after making a life-changing score.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

The Mega Millions jackpot has climbed to more than $900 million — a record for Mega Millions and the second-largest lottery jackpot in United States history — and that means thousands of Americans will be anxiously tuning in to Friday evening's drawing, visions of giant checks dancing in their heads.

Let's say you're lucky and you win, beating the 1-in-302,575,350 odds and becoming an instant multimillionaire. What should you do next?

One thing not to do is get carried away with immediately planning a shopping spree, said Rich Ramassini, a certified financial planner and director of strategy and sales performance at PNC Investments in Pittsburgh.

"It's fun to actually dream about winning the lottery and fantasize about immediately buying an airplane or private island while boasting about it on Facebook," he said. "The reality is that, if you find yourself holding the winning ticket, you should take a deep breath and slow down."

Even though you may want to brag about your new millionaire status, Ramassini advises that you limit the number of people you tell about your immense winnings.

"The truth is that this incredible amount of money has the potential to ruin or change relationships," he said. "You also could be hounded by so-called friends and relatives who suddenly come out of the woodwork."

You'll have to go public eventually (there are only six states where lottery winners can remain completely anonymous: Delaware, Kansas, Maryland, North Dakota, Ohio and South Carolina), but you should still take some steps to protect your privacy. Boasting about your win online could be a way to put a target on your back, Ramassini said, for solicitors and even fraudsters.

Most lottery winners have never had to manage such a large sum before their win. With the Mega Millions up to $970 million as of Thursday afternoon, with a cash option of $548 million, you'll need financial planning and professional guidance. Professionals can also help you decide whether to take the lump sum or get your Mega Millions in annual installments, which depends on your personal financial and cash flow situation.

"It's an immense amount of money, but if you aren't disciplined, you can easily blow through it," said Ramassini. A financial planner will help you set goals for spending, saving, gifting and investing, so the Mega Millions win isn't just a flash in the pan.

You should also plan for an emergency fund, debt payoff, retirement and daily expenses. Find an attorney to update your will and to create an estate plan or trust account as well, and tap an accountant for help handling all the taxes on those Mega Millions.

Prepare to pay Uncle Sam — immediately

The Lottery Commission will automatically withhold 24 percent of your winnings for federal taxes, but that's not the end of what you'll owe.

Winning the Mega Millions jackpot will bump you into a higher tax bracket at 37 percent, and since officials only took out 24 percent initially, that means you'll still owe money to the IRS when you do your taxes.

Melissa Labant, director of tax policy at the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, said this surprises a lot of people.

"They think, 'Oh, I'm good, they took out taxes when they wrote me the check, everything else is mine to keep,' and the answer is no, they took out the minimum amount required under the law,"

she said. "You're likely going to have to pay that difference."

You'll also have to think about state income tax. If you take the annual Mega Millions jackpot payments, this might come into play if you want to move. Only seven states have no income tax: Alaska, Florida, Nevada, South Dakota, Texas Washington and Wyoming. (New Hampshire and Tennessee don't have a state income tax, but do tax interest and dividends.)

"If I were to win a substantial amount of money, I would think that would change my entire life, and at that point folks might think about possibly relocating," Labant said. "Say you always wanted to live in Florida, so you buy a second house or move to Florida. I'd strongly encourage you talk to [a certified public accountant], because if you had decided to get installments and you become a Florida resident in future years, then possibly some of those winnings may not be subject to state income tax."

Finally, if you're a generous Mega Millions lottery winner and you want to share some of your cash, you'll have to think about gift tax. For 2018, the federal gift tax applies to any amount over $15,000.

"The truth is that this incredible amount of money has the potential to ruin or change relationships."

Rich Ramassini, financial planner and director of strategy and sales performance at PNC Investments

"Which is relatively small when you win a $900 million jackpot," Labant admitted. But if you're writing a lot of checks to friends and family, it's something to think about, and it also means you now have a gift tax return filing requirement.

Basically, there's a lot of new rules you'll have to navigate, and professionals can help. And after you talk to them, you won't have to deprive yourself, Ramassini said.

"Most important, enjoy your wealth," he said, "so splurge a bit — within reason — on a new car or vacation."

Tompkins Square Halloween Dog Parade 2018 is back on

The parade was saved following funding issues that jeopardized this year's event.

Pet owners and adorers alike can rejoice: The Tompkins Square Halloween Dog Parade 2018 is back on.

But it won't be held in Tompkins Square Park.

Sunday's parade, which begins at noon, will now take place at the East River Park Amphitheater within Corlears Hook Park on the Lower East Side.

The parade is a beloved tradition in which costumed pups march around the East Village park as a fundraiser for the Tompkins Square Dog Run. But the 28th iteration of the fall feature was threatened when organizers announced they were having funding issues.

Back in August, organizers said that the city parks department asked for a larger $1 million insurance and liability policy for the event, to cover the larger crowds that have been coming to watch the pups parade in costume. Organizers didn't have the funds to cover that, so they had to cancel this year's event.

Now, thanks to community leaders and ESPN stepping up, the Tompkins Square Halloween Dog Parade is a go.

"This beloved Lower East Side tradition wouldn't be happening this year without the tireless efforts of [local civic group] Good Old Lower East Side and the supporters of the Tompkins Square Park Dog Run," Council Member Carlina Rivera said in a statement.

ESPN will broadcast the Tompkins Square Halloween Dog Parade 2018 with Katie Nolan as the host, so dog lovers outside of New York City can still enjoy the costumed pets. ESPN is also making a $10,000 donation to City Parks Foundation that will go to supporting the Dog Run.

Terracotta Warriors NYC Makeover Event hosted by Shaanxi Provincial Tourism Development Commission officially kicked off near Times Square in the Big Apple on October 12th. It aims to encourage international tourists to Shaanxi, the global tourism hub in China.

New Yorkers dressed up as the Terracotta Warriors or Tang Dynasty ladies, and snap pictures at the eye-catching pop-up photo booth (an RV decorated by Shaanxi' s most iconic landmarks). Some participants also had the live video chat with Mr. Bing about fascinating destinations in Shaanxi.

Terracotta Warriors NYC Makeover Event is a part two of Mr. Bing' s Travel Diary series, which is a promotional Vlog video series filmed by Shaanxi tourism department this year. In the film, a gentleman who claims to be Mr. Bing started an incredible journey with a Ukraine fan Yuliia in Shaanxi. Mr.Bing's name is Yuan Shuai, graduated from Xi'an International Studies University. He dressed up as a Terracotta Warrior in the film and traveled to 20 prime picturesque spots in Shaanxi.

Shaanxi is the capital of 13 ancient dynasties, starting point of the silk road and is home to the marvelous Terracotta Warriors. In recent years, Shaanxi Provincial Tourism Development Commission had more than 20 international travel promotion campaigns in 14 countries along the "Belt and Road" to promote the new image of Shaanxi tourism to domestic and international travelers. Queens DA offers record clearing for low-level outstanding warrants Offenses like disorderly conduct and drinking alcohol in public will be cleared by District Attorney Richard A. Brown.

nikki.mascali@metro.us

For those New Yorkers who have outstanding warrants for low-level offenses, you'll have a chance to wipe the slate clean on Saturday thanks the Queens DA.

For the second year in a row, Queens District Attorney Richard A. Brown will hold a "Second Chance" event that will forgive outstanding warrants on low-level violations such as disorderly conduct, public alcohol consumption, littering and trespassing without fear of arrest.

This year's outstanding warrants record clearing will take place Saturday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Universal Church at 68-03 Roosevelt Ave. in Woodside.

There were between 200 and 300 attendees at last year's forgiveness program, a representative from the Queens DA's office told Metro Thursday. The benefits for individuals who have such offenses cleared are akin to those eligible for last year's state legislation allowing certain past conviction records to be sealed.

"The overall purpose of this event is to provide a safe place for individuals to come to clear their warrants," the DA's office said. "By affording them this opportunity, it is our hope that they will no longer be precluded from obtaining the basic necessities of life such as employment and educational and housing opportunities."

Saturday's record clearing is open to any New Yorker who has had a low-level (or pink summonses) issued to them within the city's five boroughs. Individuals must bring a valid, state-issued photo ID.

The Queens DA previously said that a person's immigration status will not prevent outstanding warrants from being cleared.

Additionally, there will be Legal Aid Society representatives on hand to offer help for residents who may have other offenses that are not eligible for clearing as well as a resource fair, the Sunnyside Post reported.

Colgate halts detergent plant for lack of boxes

Colgate-Palmolive Co. has halted production at its detergent and dish soap plant in Venezuela because it lacked cardboard boxes to ship products, a union leader said on Thursday.

The plant in the city of Valencia stopped operations on Monday, union representative Carlos Rodriguez said in a telephone interview. Its cardboard provider, Ireland's Smurfit Kappa, halted production in Venezuela last month after government authorities took over its local unit.

Smurfit Kappa was one of the few remaining shipping materials manufacturers in the OPEC nation. Colgate is attempting to import cardboard from neighboring Colombia, Rodriguez said.

Rodriguez said the lack of cardboard prompted the company to push up vacations for the plant's 77 workers. He said a Colgate toothpaste plant was still operating, but had enough cardboard stock to cover only one more month of production.

"If [the toothpaste plant] does not get the cardboard, its operations will also be suspended," Rodriguez said.

Colgate-Palmolive did not immediately respond to a request for comment. The company has five plants in Venezuela, including a soap factory that stopped operations more than a year ago.

We've already talked about dogs in bars. Some might think, at length! But what about dogs on the subway? We have a Grumble today about those people who are brazen enough to bring their doggos onto train cars during your morning commute.

READER WRITE-INS:

DOGS ON THE TRAIN
Too many dogs on the subway that are not service dogs. I recently saw a family get on the 4 train at Utica Ave smack-dab in the middle of morning rush around 7:30 AM. Parents, 2 kids and a huge dog that was not on a leash. I don't know where all of them were going, but couldn't they leave the dog home? Although the dog seemed obedient, who's to say that someone getting on the train won't be startled by that beast? This thing was solid & had a head like a pumpkin. A little yorkie in a duffel bag or carrier is fine, but Cujo is something else! Dog owners should take into consideration the size of their dog and put a muzzle on them before getting on the subway, not to mention having a proper collar & leash. The MTA is its own worst enemy with delays so we don't need another delay because Cujo started barking and took a bite out of a nervous straphanger. Here's an afterthought: where are the transit police when you need them to issue a ticket? #JustAnotherDayOnThe"IRT" — Alison Forde, Metro New York reader

Aries Look at the big picture and consider where you can do the most good. What you offer others will lead to an opportunity that is worth considering.

Taurus Much can be accomplished if you focus on what's important and ignore those who are difficult to get along with. It's the results that matter.

Gemini Work alongside your peers, and keep an eye on who does what. Don't let anyone take credit for your input. Emotional matters shouldn't interfere with your productivity.

Cancer You'll be able to bring about positive change if you are intent on putting your ideas and plans into play. Don't leave anything to chance or fear doing things your way.

Leo Use your skills and time wisely. Suggestions made by someone trying to get you to change should be met with a request that you both put in more effort.

Virgo A day trip, shopping spree or gathering of old friends or relatives will be enlightening. The information and experience you gain will help you see life from a unique perspective.

Libra Try something new. An energetic approach to life and the things you enjoy doing most will lead to new beginnings. Participation and networking will give you something to think about.

Scorpio Do something nice for someone you love. A positive and helpful attitude will help keep tempers down and reactions amicable. A unique offer should be considered.

Sagittarius Take a moment to consider what others do and say. Question anyone who is inconsistent or vague. Truth is important, especially when you are dealing with matters that affect others.

Capricorn It's up to you to bring about the changes you want to see happen. A unique job prospect will interest you. Call someone who can offer more information or perhaps even an introduction.

Aquarius Don't mull over what needs to be done when you can take the initiative and put matters behind you. Someone will try to entice you with something that is costly or risky. Take a pass.

Pisces You can wheel and deal and make changes that will improve your personal finances, health or a legal concern you have. Listen to what's being offered and counter with what you want. EUGENIA LAST

Why making 'Mid90s' was a dream come true for Jonah Hill

The actor-turned-director says the first day of filming was the "best moment" of his life.

matthew.juul@metro.us

"Mid90s" is now in theaters. TOBIN YELLAND

Jonah Hill never really dreamed of being a comedy star or an Oscar-nominated actor, and he certainly never could've imagined becoming a style icon beloved by Instagram users. Instead, Hill always wanted to be behind the camera, a goal he finally got to achieve with his directorial debut "Mid90s."

The 34-year-old star, who both wrote and directed the coming-of-age tale, felt nothing but unbridled joy as he worked on the project, as it was truly a dream come true.

"As an actor, you're a very important color in someone else's painting, and I've been a pretty good green for a long time — and I like being a pretty good green," Hill tells Metro. "But it was my dream to get to paint my own painting."

As the title suggests, the film is set in the '90s and centers around Stevie (Sunny Suljic), a 13-year-old boy who's trying to find his place in the world and grows up a little too quickly after befriending a group of older teens. Stevie and company bond over their mutual love of skateboarding, a pastime they use to escape the horrors of their family lives.

According to the cast of relative newcomers, Suljic and the other young actors featured in "Mid90s" felt extremely comfortable working under Hill, who did everything in his power to make them feel at home. Ryder McLaughlin, who plays the quiet videographer of the group nicknamed Fourth Grade, compared their relationship with Hill to that of "good friends," as he would often offer them advice on everything from navigating publicity to "girl problems."

"It felt like he's always been a director," says McLaughlin. "It didn't feel like a new thing for him."

"The times I've given my best performances is when I trusted the filmmaker the most," says Hill. "All I knew was I had to spend as much time as I could before we started shooting, understanding that I need to let these people know that I have their back. I would rather die than embarrass them."

While "Mid90s" marks Hill's first turn in the director's chair for a feature film, he's effectively been in film school under the tutelage of Hollywood's best filmmakers throughout his career as an actor, working with the likes of Martin Scorsese, Quentin Tarantino, Judd Apatow and the Coen brothers, just to name a few. So it's no surprise that Hill was excited and filled with "bliss," rather than nervous or surprised, when he finally got to the set on the first day of filming.

"I've been in so many scenes in so many movies over the years, that to me, it was just pure excitement," Hill says. "I always say to anyone in the film business or anyone starting out in the film business, 'It's not real until you pull up and the trucks are there.'

"Because everything before that, they didn't pour a bunch of money into, so once the trucks are there, you at least get one day to shoot," he adds. "When I pulled up and I saw the trucks, that was probably the best moment of my life."

‘Making a Murderer: Part 2’ filmmakers on becoming the documentary’s subject

“Making a Murderer: Part 2” is now available to stream on Netflix. NETFLIX

Laura Ricciardi and Moira Demos discuss what they did differently for the second part of Netflix’s hit documentary series.

ANDREW HUSBAND

During a uniquely long cold open, the first episode of “Making a Murderer: Part 2” begins not with a title card, but with a series of scenes and cuts about the documentary itself. Yes, the second installment of the popular series still focuses on convicted murderers Steven Avery and Brendan Dassey, and the efforts of various people to clear their names or ensure they remain behind bars, but this? This seems odd.

But it’s actually not, and according to filmmakers Laura Ricciardi and Moira Demos, their decision to turn the cameras inward actually reflects many of the project’s most important themes.

“One of the themes of part one was the difference, or the rub, between public and private. What goes on in the news conference business? What happens in the interrogation room? What goes on in court? We wanted to show what happened behind the scenes in court, or what happened as everyone was preparing for that,” Demos explains.

“So once we decided that we were going to continue to document this story and embark on part two,” she continues, “the moment you arrive back in that world, go back to Manitowoc and go back to the Averys, it’s undeniable that the world has changed in significant ways.”

Demos isn’t wrong, for despite the reach of the original 2005 New York Times article that first drew her and Ricciardi to Avery and Dassey’s case, it pales in comparison to what “Making a Murderer” has done for them. Millions of Netflix subscribers across the United States, if not the globe, now know just about everything to know about Steven and Brendan.

“I think it was a fairly straightforward decision to include the launch of the series and the response to it, because we’re all about context,” says Demos. “It’s why we do long-form storytelling. It informs our present. The context of events helps you understand them, and it was definitely about setting up the context, or the world, in which part two was going to be taking place.”

As much credence as the documentarians’ efforts to document themselves may lend to their attempts at objectivity, however, the next 10 episodes will surely have as many detractors as the first 10 did. So Ricciardi and Demos took extra steps to ensure transparency whenever possible. Even, it turns out, in the closing credits, which list the names of groups and individuals they reached out to, but either refused to cooperate or refrained from responding at all.

“We just wanted to make explicit that part about the process,” says Ricciardi. “With part one, I was a first-time filmmaker and certainly a first-time documentarian. I think I took for granted that people would understand our process, and understand that we did our due diligence in terms of reaching out to people on all sides of this.”

“Through various interviews,” she adds, “I realized that that wasn’t the case, so we thought we’d just deal with this head-on. It’s a way to explicitly state that we were seeking to include a range of voices, as long as they met the criteria for what should be part of the story. Basically, they had to speak from their first-hand experience, have direct knowledge of, or be directly impacted by what happened.”

Whether or not audiences will agree with their efforts to render their filmmaking practices that much clearer remains to be seen. Though considering the massive response to the first part, chances are good that part two’s release will engender just as many reactions once viewers watch it.

Vikings vs. Jets: What to watch

Metro previews the Jets' Week 7 matchup against the Vikings.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

The New York Jets conclude their three-game homestand on Sunday afternoon against the Minnesota Vikings looking to win their third-straight game following victories over the Denver Broncos and Indianapolis Colts.

This could be the first time since Weeks 3-5 of the 2017 season that the Jets have won three consecutive games, though they'll be facing a Vikings team that looks to be hitting their stride with two-straight wins of their own.

With a dangerous offense that features quarterback Kirk Cousins, second-year rusher Dalvin Cook, and a wide-receiving corps that features Adam Theilen and Stefon Diggs, Minnesota is favored as the road team.

Here are three things to watch for on Sunday:

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN...

The Vikings picked up their franchise quarterback this offseason with the signing of Kirk Cousins, but it was the rebuilding Jets who were all-in on him prior to the 2018 NFL Draft, offering him a $90 million deal. With winning as quickly as possible in mind, Cousins opted to take a smaller contract with a Vikings team that came within a game of Super Bowl LII.

His decision allowed the Jets to draft Sam Darnold, who will be lining up opposite Cousins on Sunday afternoon despite nursing an elbow injury. While the USC product is showing the promise of developing into a franchise quarterback, Week 7 will provide an opportunity for Darnold to show the Jets that they didn't miss out on anything. Cousins is on pace to throw for over 5,100 yards and 32 touchdowns this season.

THE BIG PLAY WILL BE THERE

Four of Darnold's nine touchdown passes this season have come from 30 yards out or more as a bulk of New York's offensive success comes via the big play.

Relying on that kind of attack is a dangerous game to play considering the Jets have the worst red-zone offense in the NFL with a touchdown rate of just 30-percent.

The Jets might be able to connect on a few big ones in Week 7 against a susceptible Vikings secondary that has allowed the most plays of 40 yards or more this year at seven. Minnesota also ranks 29th in the league with 26 plays of 20-plus yards allowed.

Look for Darnold to continue spreading the wealth as he completed passes to 12-different receivers through six games this season.

DEFENSE WILL HAVE THEIR HANDS FULL

There is no denying that Cousins is off to a red-hot start despite the Vikings' mediocre 3-2-1 record this season. The 30-year-old is completing over 70-percent of his passes for 1,921 yards, 12 touchdowns and just two interceptions through six games.

The Jets defense is prone to giving up some big-time yardage, allowing 300-plus yards in four of their opening six games. So it's a safe bet to believe that Cousins will be having a solid game.

That being said, this is a Jets defense that makes plenty of the plays needed to keep the team in games. New York ranks second in the NFL with 15 takeaways, including three interceptions of Andrew Luck during last week's victory over the Indianapolis Colts without Trumaine Johnson and Buster Skrine.

NFL Week 7: Jets will hang with Vikes

New England Patriots (-3) at Chicago Bears
This is one of the toughest games to decipher in Week 7. New England reeled off three straight wins, thumping the Dolphins and Colts before handing the previously-undefeated Chiefs their first loss of the year. But as the Patriots hit the road once more, they face a Chicago team that's capable of giving them fits.

Both of New England's losses this year (Jacksonville and Detroit) occurred away from home against a team with a furious pass rush. The Bears have that in spades, with Defensive Player of the Year frontrunner Khalil Mack leading the charge. Even though Chicago is 17th in passing yards per game allowed, Tom Brady may struggle to move the ball at Soldier Field.

However, the Bears are looking for a bounce-back performance after allowing 31 points to Brock Osweiler and the Dolphins last week. And they're not nearly as dangerous on offense as New England is (19th in yards per game).

All signs point to the Under (49.5), but as for picking a side, perhaps the Bears will use their strong home field advantage (8-1-1 against the spread in their last 10 home tilts) to cover or even spring the upset.
The pick: Bears +3

Minnesota Vikings (-3) at New York Jets
Despite being left for dead by some after a 1-3 start, the Jets have won consecutive games, albeit over the Broncos and Colts, to get back into the playoff picture.

The Jets have a stiff challenge at home against the Vikings. GETTY IMAGES

Sam Darnold's offense is now 10th in points per game and draws a decent matchup with a depleted Minnesota defense that just lost corner back Mike Hughes for the season (ACL tear). The Vikings' defense has clearly taken a step back from 2017, as they're 19th in points per game allowed and 26th in yards per play allowed.

The Jets' defense is susceptible to the pass (23rd in yards per game allowed), meaning Kirk Cousins should have a fine game stats-wise. But the Vikings are just 1-5-1 against the spread in their last seven games as the favorite, while New York is 9-3 against the spread in their last 12 games at home.
The pick: Jets +3

Carolina Panthers at Philadelphia Eagles (-4.5)
The Panthers loss to Washington last week, in which they committed three turnovers, continued an alarming trend for Carolina, as they've now dropped four of their last five against the spread on the road.
The pick: Eagles -4.5

Greinke an option for Yanks?

The Diamondbacks are shopping their ace while the Yankees need pitching help.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

The Arizona Diamondbacks, after a disappointing 2018 season, look to be on the verge of breaking up this winter with one of their biggest names, starting pitcher Zack Greinke, reportedly on the block.

USA Today's Bob Nightengale reported last week that the Diamondbacks "would love" to move Greinke, who just finished the third year of his six-year, $206 million deal.

It's been an inconsistent three years in Arizona as he's posted a 3.53 ERA, but Greinke is still 20 games over .500 as a Diamondback with a 45-25 record.

After an 82-80 2018 season, Diamondbacks management has seen enough as the franchise is now facing a rebuild. Even star first baseman Paul Goldschmidt is expected to be the subject of trade talks this winter.

While Greinke turns 35 on Oct. 21, the Diamondbacks shouldn't have much trouble dealing him. Though they will likely have to eat some of his contract considering he's projected to make $34.5 million in 2019 and $25 million in 2020 and 2021. He's an effective pitcher, but with that kind of money on the table, one would expect to see a Clayton Kershaw-type output from the mound. It's worth noting though that Greinke signed this deal with the Diamondbacks following a 2015 Cy Young Award-winning campaign with the Los Angeles Dodgers in which he went 19-3 with a 1.66 ERA.

The Diamondbacks are looking to trade Zack Greinke this winter. GETTY IMAGES

As it goes in Major League Baseball, any big name on the free-agent market or the trading block will immediately be connected to the New York Yankees. It's no secret that they are in desperate need of starting pitching, too.

Luis Severino's implosion during the second half of the season is making everyone second guess whether or not he can truly be the ace of the Yankees rotation. Behind him, Masahiro Tanaka was inconsistent while CC Sabathia and Sonny Gray likely won't be playing their baseball in the Bronx in 2019. Gray is expected to be traded while Sabathia will not be re-signed.

Veteran southpaw J.A. Happ will be a free agent after going 7-0 with a 2.69 ERA in 11 starts with the Yankees after being acquired from the Toronto Blue Jays and Jordan Montgomery will be back after missing most of the 2018 season due to Tommy John surgery.

It's been quite some time since Greinke was an American League pitcher. He spent the first seven years of his career with the Kansas City Royals before a breif sting with the Los Angeles Angels in 2012.

With 15 MLB seasons under his belt, Greinke's best days are behind him, but a veteran presence with big-game experience could do wonders for the Yankees if they could acquire Greinke at the right price. The Diamondbacks will be looking for prospects to spark their rebuild, meaning names like Justus Sheffield, Chance Adams or Clint Frazier could come up.
